The feeling among the salts along the water front, who know racing and what it entails as thoroughly as any body of men anywhere, may be gummed up in the expression of one who gave this opinion. "Anything that floats, from a row boat to a dreadnought, needs first of all a master. That's what ails this new Shamrock IV. The shipbuilders are all right in their way but their hearts are net in the work like the owners. Let Sir Thomas show himself at the plant and anxious to put in a word for bertha. Every one in Gosport is keenly interested in the progress of the cup challenger's construction and there are so many reasons for the unexpected delay of the yatcht's taking water as there are names in the town directory. But the real reason every one seems to have overlooked. It is nothing in the world but a disinclination of the shipbuilders part to pay the usual extra wages for overtime work demanded by the riveters and drillers, who themselves have wasted more than a month waiting for special metal sheathing.

Mechanics Refuse to Work.

Even the lure of extra pay would not have weighed with the mechanics against the loss of all time for leisure and recreation, but when the announcement was forthcoming that the regular hour scale was to apply to overtime, they refused to work at all.

A strike was averted by Charley Nicholson, the designer of the craft and the sative head of the concern. His scheme of compromise resulted in the men containing work Sundays and overtime for lar pay, on the understanding that Balance would be forthcoming from Thomas.
